

This is a very rare interview conducted in West Germany in 1981 with Lina Heydrich. Lina was the faithful wife of Reinhard Heydrich and an ardent member of the National Socialist Party. She joined the NSDAP shortly after hearing a speech by Adolf Hitler in 1929 and met Reinhard shortly thereafter. Lina had a major impact on Reinhard's life and even led him to t

I would like to ask you a few questions about what you remember about the Third Reich and the war and your husband Reinhard.

Lina: Yes, yes, just ask. I'm happy to talk to you and tell you what I remember.

I understand you were a party member early on and encouraged your husband to join the SS?

Lina: Yes, I had a brother who was upset about what became of his country and the Nazis had the vision and the answers to save Germany. He encouraged me to read literature and go to a speech. I got to know Hitler personally and was very impressed. I knew what he said was right. It is true that I joined the NS party and when I met my former husband I encouraged him to pursue a career in the SS.

The Reds in Germany were mainly led by Jews and were very cruel to early party members; they threw bombs on houses, attacked SA men and killed many. I too had dealings with them. They tried to fire party members from their jobs, harassed and threatened them. The SA had to be tough to fight that and they did a good job because most of them were ex-soldiers and could fight. The SS was formed to protect speakers from harm, because these gangs came for talks and meetings disturb.

What else do you know about Himmler?

Lina: The Reichsfuhrer SS Himmler was a dreamer; he had a vision for a great new world. One where the Germanic peoples were safe and secure. I remember he was very kind and always made sure that his husbands' wives and families were well taken care of, especially when they were killed. He created a force that was a noble knighthood of brave, honorable, and loyal men. The only thing that bothered me was his marriage. He was unhappy in her and strove for his pretty secretary who was younger. But that seems to be common in all societies, especially today. He had a very good relationship with his first wife and treated her very well.

He understood that a war was being waged against the Germanic bloodlines and he worked to end that war and undo the damage. I really enjoyed hearing his ideas and visions. If Germany had won the war, we would now see a whole new world.

As the?

Lina: Himmler understood that there is a race of people we call Jews who are actively trying to destroy the bloodlines of the Aryan people through racial pollution. They have been fighting this war for a few thousand years and our people are unaware of it. The "intellectuals" today portray race as unimportant and anyone who advocates keeping race undefiled is a bad person. The SS wanted the Germanic peoples of Europe to live a life where their race was everything and survival was guaranteed.

The right choice of spouse

This chart by Dr. Frercks, Deputy Head of the Nazi Party's Office for Racial Policy, was originally published in 1935.

That's why so many Europeans came to the SS. They understood that Jewish Marxism was a growing danger and that it was attempting to use the ignorant masses to commit their own suicide, so to speak. It uses humans as slaves to the system, and when they are defenseless, they are forced to absorb all races into their spheres, which will eventually outstrip and replace them. It was the task of the SS to reverse this mentality and give the nations many healthy, European children. This does not mean killing defective humans, as is claimed, but selective breeding to ensure that the mate is healthy and defect-free. This guarantees a healthy bloodline that makes life easier for everyone. It was sad to visit sanatoria where defective children were simply dismissed as undesirable because irresponsible parents did not care about the outcome of the mating.

Did your husband think so too?

Lina: Yes, he did. We grew up in a world that didn't care about European blood; it was always taken for granted that our bloodlines would never be in difficulties would arise. The first war showed that it could happen, and a few sounded the alarm that the sacred blood of Europe must be protected from the external influences of the Jews and the hordes that bring them into the nations where they settle. My husband saw this very well and fully agreed with Reichsführer SS Himmler on this question.

He felt sorry for the children he would see and urged education about genetics and wise decisions when it came to having children. Unfortunately, not everyone is healthy enough to give birth to healthy children, and when children are not born healthy, people struggle to care for them. Therefore, it is unfair to blame your people for their uncontrolled urges. Genetics is everything for a healthy people.

If I may ask a difficult question: I read that your husband was killed because he was so bad to the people of Czechoslovakia, do you think that's true?

Lina: No, the opposite is actually the truth. I was there and although my husband never involved me in his business I saw how people were treated and how they behaved. When my husband was appointed Protector, it meant exactly what the word means, which is to protect. Coming into this position, he was dismayed that NS Germany was friendly to other nations, but the Czechs were not treated exactly the same since their previous leaders were anti-German.

He set to work to change that, decreeing better rations, working conditions, paid vacation and travel, less control and greater access to him. He wanted the people to help Germany win and assured them that their voices would be heard. It worked, production skyrocketed and there was no more sabotage. It's a big lie that he was killed because he was bad. In truth, he was killed because he was so good and people liked him. The Allies who arranged the killing took the opportunity to kill a senior official, which was against the rules of war. The communists were trained and smuggled in by the English.

The sadness and support of the people of Prague is undeniable, long lines said goodbye. Would they have done the same if he had been an "executioner" as the victors claimed? I can remember many acts of compassion and charity that my husband showed to the people, he always wanted to be a good example for the NS in action. I remember a story

My husband reviewed the case and then ordered the local police to arrest and execute the rapist under German law.

The family thanked him with flowers and gifts and informed him that their daughter no longer had to live in fear that her attacker was still alive.

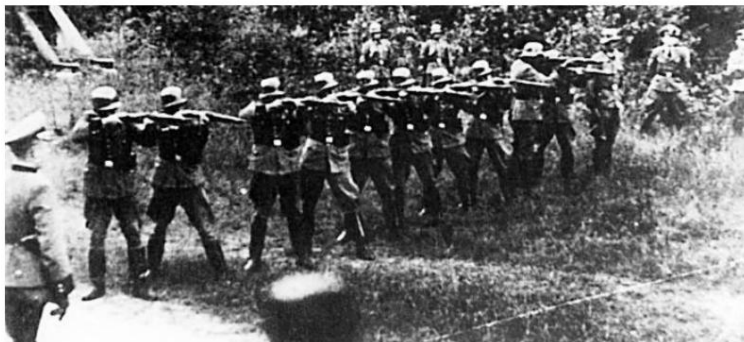

What about Lidice and all the deaths that happened after he was killed?

Lina: I only heard the name after the war. As far as I know, there was a small group in Czechia that resisted German rule, they are called partisans.

Part of the group went to England to get money and materials for the assassination and they stored what they brought in Lidice. The townsfolk all knew they were there and what they were doing. They promised the people that the Allies would come to help them and that the Germans would be gone soon.

The townspeople illegally helped and hid them. Nobody reported it to the police; they allowed Allied weapons and communications equipment to be hidden in homes. They became irregulars because they passively or actively supported illegal operations against the government. The men were shot, the women imprisoned. The German police were confronted with the harsh reality of terrorists in the Balkans and on the front lines. Measures had to be tough to prevent further attacks and punish those responsible. From what I've heard from other SS men, the terrorists they fought were sadistic killers who often killed innocent people to make a mark.

I find it interesting that these people are celebrated as heroes today and that parks and streets are named after them. If the world only knew the truth, it would be despised and condemned.

Did your husband believe in religion and pagan customs like Reichsfuhrer SS Himmler?

Lina: If I understand your question correctly, did my husband think like Himmler in relation to religion? I will say that my husband was a Christian and an SS man and I will try to explain that. The SS was a unit based on love for the people, reverence for the past and honoring our origins. A subject that Reichsfuhrer SS Himmler spent hours pondering was the question of where we came from. How is it that almost the whole world conquered and influenced by only one race? What makes this breed so special? This is what the Ahnenerbe was supposed to research and why the SS supported it.

Excavations at Solonje in Ukraine, 1943

I hope that one day the Ahnenerbe expeditions will get the attention they deserve. I've heard rumors of Aryan mummies in the Orient, Egypt, America and all over the world. These are older than the history of the so-called native people. The SS wanted to prove that our race had its beginnings in the areas of Persia but spread all over the world. The connection to pagan symbols is only out of respect for the ancestors who came to Europe and formed large, progressive societies. The Teutons are the driving force behind almost all great discoveries, so we honor their symbols because this was our past.

A lie spread by the churches in Germany today is that the SS hated religion and persecuted the church - this is false. There was a strange connection between Germany's pagan past and Christian present. Some in the SS just wanted to tie in with the past and reject Christianity as a Jewish fairy tale. The Reichsführer-SS Himmler, however, raised the question of whether today's Jews might not be the same as the Bible speaks of. Perhaps they are liars and cheats who have stolen the identity of the Creator's true great race.

The SS was not anti-religious, we often attended church services, like almost all SS men. What we reject is the Jewish influence on our religion and history. Before that, Martin Luther warned that the Jews tried long ago to take over and influence the early church. My husband struggled with some parishioners who just couldn't understand it. For them they were Jews a chosen, protected people who, no matter how evil, were still placed above all else by the Creator. What insanity to think that such an ugly and hateful people could be a chosen people?

Are you still in contact with former SS comrades?

Lina: Yes, the SS always takes care of theirs as best we can. My husband had very loyal friends and comrades. He was very popular because of his friendliness and direct manner. I understand that he was sometimes difficult to work for, but he was always respected. I would support any former SS man who needs it. My husband had an inn on the North Sea and I hosted many friends there. I believe it was burned down because of its political character.

I am still in touch with many of my husband's friends, but unfortunately time is calling more and more of them to the afterlife. I have always been impressed by the many who remained loyal to Nazism and Himmler, even when the Allies made it a crime punishable by death. Even today there is a strong bond that threats and hatred cannot break. The Führer would be proud that so many remained loyal to NS and our belief in it.

How was the end of the war for you?

Lina: Terrible, it's some of my worst memories. I'm sometimes glad that my husband didn't see the fall of what he helped build and love. The Fuhrer has granted an inheritance to my family due to my husband's assassination. When the war ended, the Reds came and I was warned of the terrible atrocities, so I fled with others.

It was terrible because the planes were bombing the refugees and I had my children with me. When the military completely collapsed, partisans also entered the area and these gangs murdered many soldiers. I was lucky to make it into the Reich, but the Allies arrested me for being the wife of a war criminal. I was taunted and harassed by ex-Germans who fled and came back as an interpreter or guard for the Allies.

I was forced to watch films depicting the camps and was shocked by what I saw. However, an SS doctor explained to me that the Allies killed the inmates of the camps indirectly because supplies to the camps had collapsed. Dirty prisoners from the East infected the camps in late 1944 and early 1945. And the result was typhus, which even the Allies found difficult to control. They used propaganda tricks to make people believe there was a government policy of killing and this was the proof. They claimed my husband started it all, but I knew he wasn't capable of it. He didn't like most Jews and said they should be resettled to where they came from so the world could live in peace, but not killed.

Did your husband ever disagree with Himmler?

Lina: Oh yes, there were times when he spoke about some of Reichsfuhrer-SS Himmler's ideas on marriage, religion and the conduct of war. For the most part, however, they agreed and held the same beliefs. However, the Reichsfuhrer SS Himmler got upset when my husband didn't want to go into his ideas at dinner, for example.

He always wanted to steer the conversation towards music or something upbeat.

As I mentioned earlier, Reichsfuhrer SS Himmler was a dreamer and a visionary. He wanted everyone to know what his plans were to secure Germany's existence and thus Germanic culture. Himmler believed in reincarnation and believed himself to be King Heinrich, an idea my husband agreed might be possible. Nobody really knows what the next life will bring and that's why it's good to dream sometimes.
